

These results showed that most of the cultivated soils in this region contained high phosphorus and potassium. In addition, soils in the upcountry intermediate zone are acidic. These findings demonstrate the importance of considering the soil nutrient status before applying fertilizers in this region.

In addition, lime application will be an important consideration to achieve high yield of crops grown in this region.